The Russian Revolution, often known as the 1917 Russian Revolution, consisted of two revolutions in 1917, the first of which destroyed the imperial government in February (March, New Style) and the second of which installed the Bolsheviks in power in October (November). What is the Russian Revolution?The Russian revolution plays a vital role in World history which had a huge impact not only on Russia but also in other regions as well. It led to the formation of the Soviet Union later which was the first socialist state of the world. Here, we will be covering the Russian revolution in detail and it's related to all the concepts and events as well which will help you to understand this major event of world history. In this, we will cover the series of major events that led to this revolution, its causes, and effects of this revolution, etc. We hope these notes will help you in your studies and will increase your knowledge about historical events as well. Meaning of Russian RevolutionThe Russian revolution took place in the year 1917 when the angry workers and peasants raised their voices against the autocratic rule of Czars which was ended with the formation of the new government headed by Vladimir Lenin. Series of EventsThe various series of events are mentioned below that actually lead to the occurrence of this Revolution.The Revolution of 1905The industrial revolution came to Russia with a lot of changes such as social and political. The population was increasing in urban cities such as St. Petersburg and Moscow. Such an increase in the population was becoming a problem for the country due to the limited food supply because of the economic crisis and mismanagement and costly wars. Due to the shortage of food supply and present conditions, the people marched towards the Winter Palace of Nicholas II on Jan 22, 1905. Luckily, he was not there and he ordered not to shoot at the crowd but due to some miscommunication his orders were ignored and the troops fired on the crowd. This event is known as the Bloody Sunday Massacre. This even fueled the Russian revolution of 1905. The workers went into a number of strikes which were further deteriorating the Russian Economy. Nicolas agreed to bring reforms which were known as October Manifesto but later he dissolved the Russian Parliament. Nothing specific or significant brought out of this revolution of 1905 but the massacre sparked the angry people more. Effects of World War I Russia not have a modernized army at that time, World war I was disastrous for Russia. Germany seized the Important regions of Russia which led to more shortage of food supply and led to more economic problems. Tsar Nicholas II himself took part in the war and left his wife to take care of the government. But the Russian population hated her for being of German heritage. A lot of Russian people lost faith in the government which was seen as a revolution in the coming years. The Revolution of 1917It was real-time when this revolution took place. It can be divided into the following parts and events:February RevolutionThis revolution started on March 8, 1917. Russia used the Julian calendar at that time according to which the date of revolution is February 23. Thus, it is called the February Revolution. Angry protestors came on the streets of St. Petersburg due to severe food shortages who were joined by Industrial workers as well. They were clashing with the police. The troops failed to stop the uprising even after firing on March 11. A new provisional government was formed by the Parliament of Russia on March 12 and Nicholas II abdicated the throne. Under Alexander Kerensky, this new government was formed and he established the Statute of rights. But he continued the war, though the opposition was against it, which still worsened the economic conditions of Russia and led to more scarcity of food supply. Food riots were being seen in the cities. However the February Revolution was a mass movement, it did not necessarily reflect the aspirations of the majority of Russians because it was confined to the metropolis of Petrograd. However, the majority of those who rose to power after the February Revolution, both in the Provisional Government (the temporary government that replaced the tsar) and the Petrograd Soviet (a powerful local council representing workers and soldiers in Petrograd), favored a democratic form of government. October RevolutionIt occurred on November 6 or 7 of 1917. As per the Julian Calendar, it occurred on October 24 and 25, that's why it is known as the October Revolution. The communist revolutionaries led a coup against the government of Kerensky which was led by Vladimir Lenin. The new government was established under Lenin which was formed of a council consisting of soldiers, workers, and peasants. In this way, the World's first communist state was established with Lenin as the head of Russia as a whole. It was basically the communist revolution in Russia. But the problems of Russia did not end here. It had to face civil war and the cold war in the coming years. After October, the Bolsheviks understood that they couldn't keep power in an election-based system without surrendering their beliefs and sharing power with other parties. As a result, in January 1918, they openly abandoned the democratic process and declared themselves representatives of a Proletariat Dictatorship. In response, in the summer of that year, the Russian Civil War erupted, lasting long into 1920. Causes of the Russian RevolutionThe situation in Russia at that time was the major cause of the Russian revolution. There were several reasons for these unbalanced situations which are mentioned below which help you to understand what caused the Russian revolution: The shortage of food supply, effects of Blood Sunday, and world war I on Russia and its economy and society were some of the major reasons for this revolution. Autocracy was one of the major reasons that led to this revolution. Czar Alexander II became famous in Russia when some reforms were brought by him. But the successors after him became very autocratic such as Czar Alexander III and Czar Nicholas II. During their ruling period, various political parties lost their powers such as Meer, Jemstvo, and Duma. There was already unrest among the society and their policies and actions fueled this unrest. Thus, the autocratic rule of the Czars became one of the major reasons. Czar Alexander III and his son Czar Nicholas II followed the policy called a policy of Russification of all the systems. Nicholas II declared " One Czar, One Church, and One Russia ". Only the catholic religion and the Russian language were introduced as per this policy. Even the Russian language was introduced in non-Russian regions as well such as Poland, Lithuania, Finland, and others. This policy created big unrest in Russia. The society of Russia was very unbalanced at that time. It consisted of two classes namely the rich and the poor. The rich include all the nobles, feudal lords, and wealthy people whereas the poor class consisted of labourers, peasants, and serfs, etc. Everyone was annoyed in society. For example, the feudal lords lost their lands, political parties lost their powers, and labourers were pissed off because of low salaries, etc. A suitable environment of the revolution was created by the rise and activities of Nihilism which influenced the Russian revolution in 1917. Their main aim was only to destroy the rule of Czars. Their preachers came to destroy the existing system of Czars, the social and religious faith, and the creation of a new world. Their Organisations were doing activities to influence the people against the Czars and its system. The industrial revolution also influenced this Russian revolution. Various Russian workers were involved in the construction of railways of Trans-Siberia and Trans-Caspian and the construction of these railways led to the development of various factories and Industries in Russia. The rise of consciousness among the labourers led to having the dream to get the country free from the autocratic rule of the Czars. Consequences of Russian RevolutionThe various consequences of the Russian Revolution are mentioned below: The formation of the new government of the Bolshevik Party under Lenin, which was later known as the communist party. The formation of the secret police which was known as Cheka by the Bolsheviks after the revolution which helped Lenin to establish his powers in Russia. Distribution of the farmland to the farmers and factories to the workers. Nationalization of the banks and formation of the council at a national level to run the economy. Russia pulls itself out of World War I with the treaty of Brest - Litovsk. The end of the rule of Czars with the execution of Nicholas II, his wife, and children. Cruel methods were being adopted by Lenin for both criminals and political prisoners. The decrease in industrial production was seen and skilled workers fled the country. The civil war from 1918 to 1920. Did You Know?The October Revolution is also known as the Bolshevik Revolution. The names of the main leaders of the Bolshevik party were Vladimir Lenin, Joseph Stalin, Leon Trotsky. Joseph Stalin got power after consolidation and forcibly throwing out Leon Trotsky after the death of Lenin in 1924. Additional InformationThe Cheka which was also known as Vecheka was a security agency or sometimes called a secret police agency of the Bolsheviks which was formed after the October revolution in 1917. It worked as a shield and sword for the new system and government and to fight against the other revolutionaries. It used to operate on its own and outside the law. It was the short name of the actual Russian name Ie Chrezvychainaia Komissia means the Extraordinary commission and its first leader was Felix Dzerzhinsky. ConclusionThus, here we have covered the Russian revolution and its related concepts in detail. The Russian revolution took place in the year 1917. We have learned about the series of events that lead to the occurrence of this revolution, what caused the Russian revolution and what were its consequences, what was Cheka in Russia after the revolution, etc. These notes will be helpful for you to understand one of the major events of history, which is very important while studying world history because a lot of other topics are being studied with this concept such as World War I, the history of Russia which further includes civil war and the cold war, etc.
